The basic idea of ProSe for E-UTRAN and E-UTRAN access networks is to allow the UE to discover its proximity to the services offered by the E-UTRAN cells which are in the vicinity of the UE. The UE can then use proximity information to setup communications and the involved devices do not need to register with each other, unless the communication service requires a more specific communication setup, for example in case of emergency. Traditionally, the UE uses the UE-initiated discovery procedure to discover the eNB (E-UTRAN Node B) cells in proximity to the UE. If the UE is located far away from the central network, the UE will need to transmit many discovery signals to scan the network. Also, the UE has to gain a radio resource for transmitting the discovery signals. It may be difficult to establish more resources in some scenarios. In proximity communications, the UE can be located close to or even inside a building or inside the cell coverage area of a small cell. To keep the UE-initiated discovery procedure user-friendly, it has to be adapted for the situation where the UE is located in its cell coverage area and/or close to the eNBs.The increasingly louder drumming of fast-growing cities pushing into farmland for greener pastures in recent years has caused residents to complain about the disruption to their lifestyle and to farmers who say the practise is harming their businesses. But now a Pestalozzi survey has found that while the majority of people in rural New Zealand see the loss of farming as a f678ea9f9e
